

The Artistic Expressions of Wendy Wagner

Published on May 18, 2009 by Ana Villaronga

Wendy Wagner represents the superlative of creativity in Texas. This Austin native and Houston resident has entrapped "cuteness" and pushed it to the extremes! Her paintings resemble dreams and her mini ceramic sculptures make for an incredible collection. Wagner's soft sculptures inspire hugs of every size! What is Wendy doing? She created the future of "cute"! Qwerkys!

Last year's winner of the Hunting Art Prize, Wendy Wagner's work is on exhibit at The Houston Center for Contemporary Craft until June 21st. Her new collection of paintings will be on exhibit in Tokyo,

Japan this summer. Wendy Wagner will be the first American artist to exhibit at Gallery Trinity in Tokyo. Her expressions of cuteness and incredible talent in animation have already captured Japan's attention.

In all my years in the art world, this is a first: An artist that has invented a new art form. Wendy has transformed these characters of her imagination into realities of fantasy. Forget reality television, comics and cartoons. Qwerkys is living within a dream. Qwerkys is reality fantasy! Already an application on FaceBook and soon to become an animated TV series. Wendy Wagner has the next "must have"! Wendy has thought of everything: Custom made, stuffed Qwerkys, collectible cards, lunch boxes and school folders. This past weekend Wendy's art was on exhibit at Katy's own Pope John XXIII High School's Sunday dinner. It was a nice introduction of Wagner's work to Katy, Texas.

After years of following and collecting Wendy Wagner's art, I am proud of her talent, energy and focus. She followed her dreams and developed something completely new and fresh. Watch out Japan, Qwerkys are coming your way!

To find out more visit:

- www.wendywagner.com
- www.qwerkys.com
- www.crafthouston.org
- www.newgallery.net
- www.g-trinity.com